

Effectiveness of an Program based on the Linguistic Games to develop the skills of Understanding the Audible and Readable Conversations on Students of Fourth Year at Primary Schools in KSA

Prepared by

Dr. Zaineb Hassan El Shemry

Professor of the Arabic Methodology at the Faculty of Education

University of Hail

Abstract

The primary function of language is communication. The person in communication is in one of the following four situations: Speaking, listening, reading, or Writing. Unless the person familiar with the language accuracies and usages, he cannot understand the language which leads to stop communication.

The language learning is a main goal for the education for its importance. The main goal of language learning is providing the ability of linguistic and active communication for the learner.

The linguistic communication is not exceeding to be between speaker and listener or between writer and reader.

The language has been divided to four arts: Speaking, listening, reading, and Writing.

Habib Allah believes there is a strong link between language and thought because they are two aspects of one mental process.

In education learning, the student has several mental processes: if the communication is orally, the brain will active and receive.

The development of creative level requires the need to pay attention with the quality of curriculum.

It is noted that the education emphasizes the language proficiency, especially listening and reading because they are receiving skills. The receiving of language by listening and reading is one of introductions that lead to rich the language with new meanings.

Lessons in primary education, especially at the first stage begin with listening to texts from the teacher or the recorder, and then student must look at the pictures of the texts and speak about it orally before reading.

Despite the importance of listening skill, students still suffer from weakness in listening skill, so the studies confirm to conduct more researches related to the listening skill for all academic stages.

The reading is one of the requirements that provide students with the skills which help him to deal with situations in a new way.

Most members of the society have the creative level with various degrees. The person could have the ability to be creator if he knew the way to his creative abilities.

Learning the listening and reading by the linguistic games is one of modern methods in developing the skills of understanding the audible and readable conversations with creative level.

Listening and reading are processes of sense and understanding. During such processes, there are two simultaneous actions: the first is mechanically but the second is mentality.