Introduction

The development issue is the core issue that attracts the efforts of developing countries since the Second World War to raise the standard of living for their people after eras of underdevelopment and deprivation.

To achieve the goals of development, it is required to make a balanced development in the economic and social sides, so it is required to confirm that the development effects on the human.

There is no economic and social development without starting to develop the human. The development program in the developing countries must include all various sectors.

Hence, it is clear that the comprehensive social development is only process of integrated dimensions with multi-aspects that depend on fundamental changes.
